Read the following observation of Rabindra Nath Tagore on his own English writing. Answer the questions no. 40 to 43.

You have alluded to the English translation of the Gitanjali. I cannot imagine to this day how people came to like it so much. That I cannot write English is such a patent fact that I never had even the vanity to feel ashamed of it. If anybody wrote an English note asking me for tea, I did not feel equal to answering it. Perhaps you think that I have got over that delusion. By no means. That I have written in English seems to be the delusion.
