NASA completed the technology demonstration of its Low-Earth Orbit Flight Test of an Inflatable Decelerator (LOFTID) mission.

The cone-shaped structure will have an inflatable structure that is capable of holding its shape against drag forces.

It will also have a protective flexible thermal protection system that will protect it from the heat generated during re-entry.

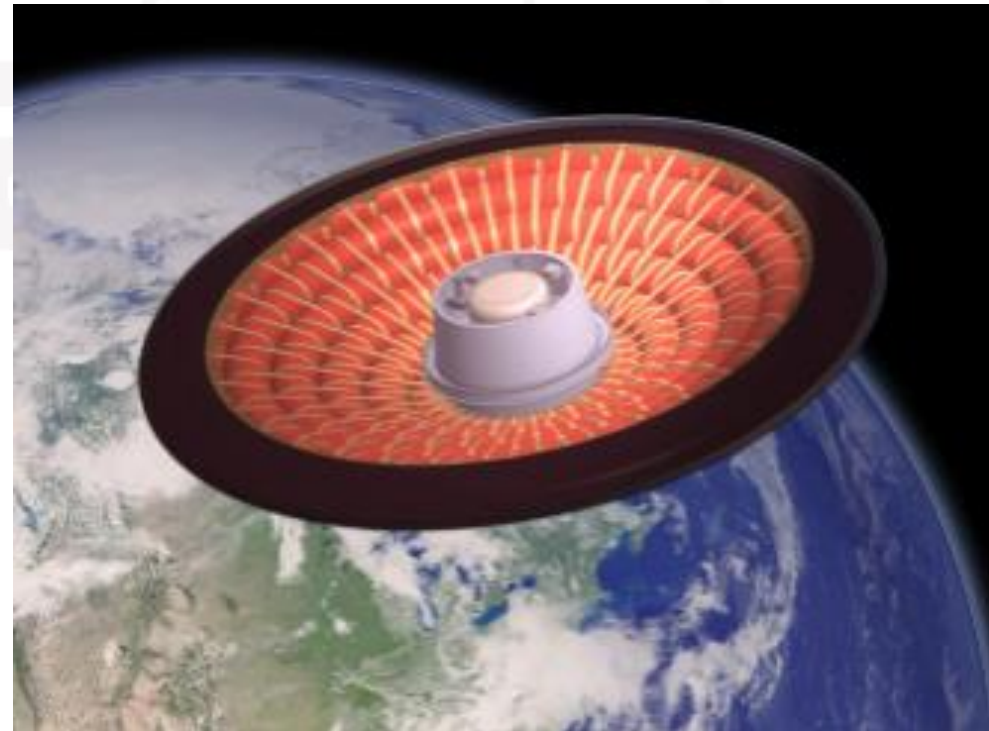

When a spacecraft or anything else enters a planet's atmosphere, drag acts upon the body and slows it down, converting kinetic energy into heat.
